

SYMPOSIUM

What we know today

- The old terminology "Polycystic Ovary Syndrome" is no longer fitting the real etiopathogenesis, at least for most of the involved patients.
- In addition, the classification of PCOs patients according the A, B, C and D phenotypes is today mandatory, because important differences exist among them.
- What above, in order to make a better diagnosis and choose more tailored and efficient therapies.

What we know today

- The old terminology "Polycystic Ovary Syndrome" is no longer fitting the real etiopathogenesis, at least for most of the involved patients.
- In addition, the classification of PCOs patients according the A, B, C and D phenotypes is today mandatory, because important differences exist among them.
- What above, in order to make a better diagnosis and choose more tailored and efficient therapies.

